Dear Mr. Teng,

Further to your telephone call yesterday, I've attached two copies of files corresponding to the page on the NIGMS Web site you inquired about titled "NIGMS Protein Structure Initiative Meeting Summary, April 24, 1998" (http://www.nigms.nih.gov/news/reports/protein\_structure.html).

The first file (protein_structure.html) corresponds to what is currently displayed on our Web site (at the above URL). This file has a last modification date of Wednesday, March 08, 2000 (according to the file's properties, as displayed in Windows Explorer).

The second file (protein_structure.html.bak) corresponds to the previous version of this page. It has a last modification date of Wednesday, May 12, 1999.

As to what exactly was modified in these files on these particular dates, I have not been able to find any answers. The page predates my time here at NIGMS. In general, we do not keep records of changes to Web pages over time. Rather, our Web pages are meant to reflect the most current information we have.

Strangely, the creation dates for these files are both Tuesday, July 24, 2001. That may seem a bit paradoxical. However, this date does not necessarily mean the date the original file was created. It could simply mean the date that the file was copied from one Web server to another (most likely at the time when we last upgraded our server).

Unfortunately, we don't have any other earlier copy of this page, as our backups for the Web site don't go back that far, so I don't have more information about its history.

Let me know if I can be of any further help.

Sincerely,
Dan Hogan
